The Journal of Religion

Issued by the Divinity Conference of the University of Chicago

Edited by GERALD BIRNEY SMITH

WHAT IS IT?

It is not a Journal of Homiletics. There are already excellent journals in this field.

It is not an organ of propaganda. There is already an abundance of propaganda of various sorts, good and bad, in the religious world.

It is not a periodical for technical archaeological investigation or for the critical analysis of historical documents. Other journals are ably promoting this valuable work of scholarship.

It is an organ for the promotion of the historical method of studying religion.

WHAT IS THE HISTORICAL METHOD?

Every religion has a real history. Some religions grow and expand. Others dwindle and die. All of them have times of successful growth and times of decline. Why does religion exist at all? What makes a religion grow? Why do some religions die? What can be done to keep a religion from losing its power? These are important questions. If they can be answered, every religious leader can walk with surer step.

The JOURNAL OF RELIGION exists to help further the investigation of the historical conditions entering into the actual development of religious life and organization. The understanding of the forces which entered into the shaping of any religion in any period of history furnishes a basis for the estimation of our own problems. With the aid of psychologists and sociologists the interpretation of what has occurred in the past can be correlated with our study of present-day religion. Such co-operation in a common task the Journal attempts to promote.

WHY YOU SHOULD SUBSCRIBE TO THE JOURNAL OF RELIGION

1. Because it is definitely planned to furnish the best possible scholarly discussions of religion and its interests. It is issued under the direction of the Divinity Faculty of the University of Chicago. It has on its staff of contributors many of the leading scholars of the world. It expects and welcomes that spirit of candid, fearless investigation which prevails in all scientific journals, believing that a better knowledge of the facts will always lead to a better organization of religion.

2. Because it deliberately emphasizes the discussion of the problems of vital religion. There are several other journals admirably equipped to investigate questions concerning documents or literary origins. But the scientific study of religion is pressing back of documents and records to the actual life of which the documents are an expression. Every article accepted for publication in the JOURNAL OF RELIGION is an interpretation of religion itself, either in some historical development, or in its psychological aspect, or in terms of some current issue of thought or practice, or in the form of missionary enterprise, or in the endeavor to understand the inner meaning of non-Christian religions, or in the interpretation of the social implications of religion.

3. Because it furnishes prompt and reliable information concerning current publications in the field of religion. Every issue contains a classified list of the latest books with brief critical statements indicating the scope and value of each book. Important publications are critically reviewed at length. A special department is devoted to suggestive comment on significant articles in current magazines and journals. The Journal is an indispensable guide to a knowledge of current publications dealing with religion.

SPECIAL FEATURES FOR THE YEAR 1922

1. A series of articles telling just what are the present aims and achievements of scholarship in the various realms of inquiry and investigation. What are New Testament scholars investigating today? What contribution to the knowledge of religion do they expect to make? How are scholars defining religion? What are the present tendencies in religious thinking? What conception of the missionary enterprise is dominating missionary effort today? These and other questions will be discussed by competent authorities.

2. Interpretations of religion as expressed in action today. In these times of social and political unrest, religion is striving mightily to find ways in which it may help to point the way to the highest spiritual values. In the Orient, in Europe, in America, what is religion doing in these stirring days?

3. The frank analysis of current issues. What is to be done with Modernism in Protestantism? What is to be said concerning the movement for Church Unity? How far have ministers the right and the duty to speak on social and industrial issues? Is the future of Christianity to be organized in terms of our present denominations, or are new lines of cleavage to be established? These and other questions will receive constant attention.

A FEW READER COMMENTS

"May I thank you for what you are doing? The Journal of Religion is a real contribution to Christian thought of the day."

"Personally, I am very much pleased with the Journal of Religion. I look forward to its visits."

"I have been delighted with the Journal of Religion, and do not wish to miss a copy."

"I am very glad that we are to have such a magazine in the United States, a magazine that takes its place in the front ranks of theological periodical literature."

"I want to say that I certainly appreciate the work that the Journal of Religion represents. I believe it is just the kind of journal that is now needed. And the periodical is meeting the need on a very high plane."

"I have been much pleased with the copies of the Journal of Religion which have come to my desk, and feel that the magazine is well planned to meet a distinct need. I gladly recommend it to all my acquaintances who are interested in a sane and intelligent religious interpretation of life."

"For nearly twenty years I have been reading the periodicals of the University of Chicago under various names, and I can say with all sincerity that the Journal of Religion fits into my religious life in a peculiar way. It is different from so many of the other periodicals which I read, and it is always so stimulating and thought-provoking that I look forward to its coming with a great deal of genuine interest."

Funeral Management and Costs

A World-Survey of Burial and Cremation

By QUINCY L. DOWD

This book gives a comprehensive view of the whole subject of the disposal of the dead and shows in detail the elements of cost entering into modern burial and cremation. It is a popular presentation of a subject which has been scientifically investigated.

WHAT IS THE COST OF DYING ?

Without fear or favor the book deals with funeral extravagances and cemetery profiteering. Case-studies are given of last sickness costs, the expense of mourning apparel, and burial among the poor. Undertaking charges and transportation are discussed at length.

The Dramatization of Bible Stories

By ELIZABETH E. MILLER, Instructor in Art in the School of Education, The University of Chicago

¶ A book which presents cogent reasons for leading children to dramatize great religious stories—develops the process of creating drama from biblical stories—shows stories in all stages of development by children engaged in their dramatization—suggests simple and practical directions for staging.

¶ This book gives the methods and results of an experiment that has been carried on by the author for several years, in adapting striking biblical stories for dramatic presentation by children. The book is educationally sound in that its purpose is to train the children in the process of dramatization, rather than to produce elaborate and finished dramatic effects.

THE RELIGIOUS EDUCATION ASSOCIATION

THE R. E. A.

The only agency which brings together all types of educational workers for the study of religious education.

The only religious agency offering an open platform of interest in religious education upon which persons of all faiths meet as equals, and offering freedom to representatives of all religious bodies.

The only agency in its field which is not dependent upon sectarian support, nor subject to either sectarian or institutional control.

The only general agency conducting a free bureau of information and offering the services of a specialized library in this field.

The only agency which unites and serves professionally the entire professional group in this field.

The only agency able at this time, with entire freedom, to carry forward the necessary fundamental, scientific work of research, investigation, formulation of principles, and free experimentation; to criticize, evaluate and advocate methods and to gather up and disseminate results of experiments; to organize, stimulate and direct professional leadership.

All persons interested in the practice or the theory of religious education are invited to membership in the Association. The annual fee of four dollars entitles one to receive the magazine "Religious Education" and to the services of the Association.

TWO NEW BOOKS

The Religion of the Psalms

By J. M. P. SMITH

Professor of Old Testament Language and Literature
University of Chicago

Books about the Psalms come and go; the Psalms go on forever. They belong to the permanent literature of the race.

In his preface the author gives the purpose of his volume as follows: "The aim of this book is to bring out the significance of the Psalms as indicative of the religious and moral standards of later Judaism." Later he says that it is his desire to present the meaning of the Psalms as it lay in the minds of their authors and earliest readers.

This book will be welcomed by all ministers and other students of biblical literature. It furnishes a delightful course of study for an adult group in either mid-week service or Sunday school.

Dante: Poet and Apostle

By ERNEST HATCH WILKINS

Professor of Romance Languages, University of Chicago

Written and published in commemoration of the six hundredth anniversary of Dante's death.

This little book contains the lectures delivered in 1921 at Columbia University and the University of Chicago.

The author discusses "The Years of Preparation," Dante's lyric poetry, his conception of the whole scheme of life, his resolution to serve as apostle of the temporal joy and of the eternal joy, and his masterpiece "The Divine Comedy as Poetry."

In writing of Dante's apostleship of the eternal joy Professor Wilkins considers those elements of Dante's deep religious insight which retain their illuminating value for the Christian world of the present day.

An Introduction to the Science of Sociology

By

ROBERT E. PARK

Professorial Lecturer on Sociology

and

ERNEST W. BURGESS

Assistant Professor of Sociology

The University of Chicago

This book is based on the belief that concrete material, placed in the students' hands, makes possible a clearer understanding of the principles of sociology than has been possible with the method of presentation in the past. The experience of the Department of Sociology in the University of Chicago for the last three years, during which this method has been tried out and the material compiled, has demonstrated its superior value.

The book consists of a collection of readings selected to define and illustrate the concepts and principles of sociology. It is designed for the first course in sociology and is a textbook and book of readings combined.

Material is not taken from textbooks. The extracts vary from two hundred to three thousand words in length and represent the central combination of the first-hand research of various writers. Approximately seventy-five pages are devoted to bibliographies.

The work falls into fourteen chapters, as follows:

- | | |
|----------------------------|---------------------------|
| I. INTRODUCTION | VIII. COMPETITION |
| II. HUMAN NATURE | IX. CONFLICT |
| III. SOCIETY AND THE GROUP | X. ACCOMMODATION |

NEW HARVARD BOOKS

LEARNING AND LIVING

By EPHRAIM EMERTON

Nine essays on one phase or another of the academic life: its duties and rewards, the relation of the university to parents and students, and a few definite problems of the curriculum. Professor Emerton emphasizes the vital relation between education and the larger life of the Republic, so that the volume expresses those distinctive American standards which are so often only vaguely or carelessly defined. 325 pages. $3.00

IMMORTALITY AND THEISM

By WILLIAM WALLACE FENN

The Ingersoll Lecture for 1921. After some consideration of the assertions and coincidences of psychical research, Dean Fenn discusses the subject of immortality from the point of view of theism—a belief in personality as the source and sum of all values and ideals, best apprehended by us intellectually in the form of purpose animating and unifying all reality. The book thus summarizes wider ranges of thought than its particular topic. $1.00

FUGITIVE ESSAYS

By JOSIAH ROYCE

A collection of papers written mainly during Professor Royce's early days in California and hitherto virtually inaccessible, buried as they have been in the pages of local periodicals that have long ceased to appear. The Editor's Introduction analyzes Royce's mature philosophical thought and traces the relation between these essays and such later volumes as The World and the Individual and The Problem of Christianity. $4.00

BUDDHIST LEGENDS

Translated by EUGENE W. BURLINGAME

These stories are the preponderating element of the Dhammapada Commentary, and present a counterpart to the Legends of the Christian Saints. Since they resemble many well-known stories of medieval literature, Oriental and European, they will be of much interest to students of comparative literature; and at the same time the work is an admirable preparative for the study of the more difficult Buddhist books in the original. It is hard to overstate the value and convenience of the Introduction, Synopses, and various Indexes. The work is Volumes 28, 29, and 30 of the Harvard Oriental Series. Volumes are not sold separately. $15.00 a set
